

CPC Responds to the COVID-19 Pandemic

As of June 30, 2020

Thanks to our supporters, CPC has offered COVID-19 response and assistance to over 15,000 community members across the city since March 22nd when nonessential work in New York State went on PAUSE.

Program staff worked virtually and on the front lines in the community to support New Yorkers in need

- A Regional Enrichment Center (REC) serving children of essential workers aged 2-12 years old was opened in the Lower East Side of Manhattan and will continue service until Sept 8, 2020
- $376,000 in supply grants was disbursed to 628 childcare programs and $275,000 in scholarships was given to essential workers to cover their childcare expenses through New York State's deployment of the Federal CARES Act funding
- 200 affordable senior housing residents were supplied with emergency food assistance, health assistance, and other wellness support
- 6 residents with intellectual and developmental disabilities were supported with 24/7 care
- 521 households were provided direct cash assistance, ranging in amounts from $400-$2,000 based on funder specifications
- 4,500 homecare workers were mobilized throughout the crisis
- 19,400 wellness or referral calls were made to support senior citizens and their families
- 3,900 calls were made to CPC's multi-social services, with 430 SNAP applications submitted and 300 families receiving SNAP benefits; 450+ calls were received and 240 people enrolled in unemployment insurance
- Twice-daily news briefs were shared on 1480AM/1240AM radio in Cantonese and Mandarin at 2pm and 7pm until mid-June, so local families had translations of critical information in real time

108,500 lbs
of food (50,700 meals) distributed to families and seniors in need in Brooklyn, Queens and Manhattan

95,500
wellness calls or remote sessions held to support toddlers, preschoolers, school-aged children, older youth, adults and their families
